'The Dirty Dozen' is the name given to a group of 12 watches commissioned by the Ministry of Defence for use by soldiers during WWII. The MoD ordered custom-built wristwatches from 12 Swiss watchmakers: Buren, Cyma, Eterna, Grana, Jaeger-LeCoultre, Lemania, Longines, IWC, Omega, Record, Timor and Vertex. Each company was given the specific brief of providing watches that were accurate, reliable and durable, with a black dial, Arabic numerals, luminous markers, a railroad minute track, shatterproof glass and a stainless-steel case. No matter the maker, these watches can be identified by the engraved 'W.W.W.' on the reverse, as well as the broad arrowhead mark on the dial, inner case, and reverse, and both military and civil serial numbers on the reverse.

Note from the vendor: This Rolex GMT Master is being sold by the family of the original purchaser. Our father bought the watch in the port city of Aden whilst serving on the Royal Navy commando ship HMS Albion during the time of the Aden Emergency in 1965. He was then a young man of 22 years. South Yemen was still at this point (1965) under British law until 1967 when the last troops pulled out. He owned and wore this watch for around 50 years until he latterly became too frail to wear it. It has been around the world several times and has had many adventures as he was a dedicated traveller and seaman both during his time in the Royal Navy and in his later years as a civilian. It has been well looked after and regularly serviced by Rolex engineers and comes with the original manufacturer certificate, guarantee and receipt of sale papers. We hope that the next owner enjoys it for both its historical and appreciative value.
